

Who Are the Unsung Heroes in Your World?

Alonzo Fields, who worked as a butler in the White House for 21 years, becoming the first African-American promoted to Chief Butler in 1933. Fields attended four U.S. presidents and their families, making it more possible for them to conduct the business of the nation. While there are countless published works, landmarks, and libraries devoted to those presidents, Fields is one of many whose story typically goes untold.

We're excited to tell this story and celebrate Fields and his life of service.

We invite you to join the celebration by recognizing and honoring the “unsung heroes” in your own life—service providers, caregivers, childcare professionals, educators, and more.

Who makes your life more possible? Who keeps your day, or the life of your community, going? Whose untold story do you believe should be heard?
